I would suggest there is a confusion between our progress on Stray Current (Les Brunton and co) which is exceptional well documented (although not to the satisfaction of recently appointed tie staff which is another matter) and the performance on EMC which is also 'another matter'.

Unfortunately both are EMC Issues and tend to be confusing at times.

I have a meeting next week, was Tuesday, now Thursday (I think) and I am intending to speak to Tony before our meeting.

If there has been any other discussion in the interim please advise.

Kate and Scott,

Lets kill this for the time being and we will discuss with Tony in the right forum, please do not say anything to him.

Tony speaks his mind. To date that has meant that he has said very bad things about tie...this is the first instance where he has talked about SDS.

Whilst it is not professional, as usual what he has said is absolutely correct. We need to get the Stray current under control.

To add to this, this is the second recent incident where tie senior management folks have made unprofessional comments about PB in front of our current clients (NR) and/or future clients (BBS).

Steve/ Jason,

I thought you should be aware that tie (Tony Glazebrook) made some (I think) disrespectful comments about SDS to Network Rail in respect of EMC at yesterday's meeting.

It went something along the lines of 'SDS have been very slow...messed around...basically slowed down the whole process...it is their fault the process is behind!'

I didn't have the ammunition to defend us at the meeting so I briefly spoke to Tony afterwards and said that I hadn't commented as I didn't want to appear argumentative in front of NWR but that I recall the action for Immunisation to have been on tie for some time before Colin Kerr was appointed.

I don't know all the history, but even if he is correct in his opinion I felt it was unfair to talk about SDS in that manner in front of NWR and BBS (Scot was at the meeting also).

Regards

Kate
