Legally privileged

Gents

I hope my meeting with CEC Legal tomorrow (following my day off in Vienna as Tony puts it) will settle Nick Smith down on the contractual legal front.

Richard

Please do not patronise me. I do work to timetables and I am relaxed about letting other people worry – but I do expect to be kept in the loop. It also avoids embarrassing others like Andrew – he and I work very closely and have few secrets.

The timetable has been set for Carlisle for some time. The stated and agreed intention is to bring it a head quickly after my next round of discussions with EK. Whether it gets done before the TPB or 25 September may be optimistic – but it would not be a good move to delay if it can be done before.

Tony,

Let me worry about CEC, you have enough to do, anyway, I though you didn't like working to timetables!

I expect to present any deal to the Tram Project Board on 25th September, then to the full CEC council on 14th October. If these dates don't suit I will arrange special approvals processes.

Richard/David,

Andrew in passing made me aware that Nick Smith has issued a note which from the very limited comment Andrew made I am concerned it may impact on the timing of bringing Carlisle to a conclusion. Andrew (bless him) assumed I was in the circulation and quickly pulled back when he saw the blank look on my face.

I am more than relaxed about not having to be involved in responding to Nick Smith – I am just about to embark on a a week of daily grind of listening to EK and BSC's tale of woes – but I would like to know just what impact CEC will have on finalisation timing. I am pressurising Infracore to finalise next week and the indications are that BB want that also.

Tony
